Company Statement

July 31, 2019

In response to the FDA (Food and Drug Administration) and CDC (Center for Disease Control) alerts and recommendations concerning Pig Ear dog treats contaminated with Salmonella, Redbarn Pet Products is issuing the following statement:

Redbarn Pet Products is very proactive in preventing pathogenic contamination in their products. All raw material lots are sampled and tested upon receipt for microbial contaminants. Our processes include heat treatment of our products at temperatures and times that are lethal to pathogenic bacteria, including Salmonella. Any WIP (Work in Process) materials are sampled and tested immediately after processing and in addition, all finished product lots are sampled after packaging and are again tested for any microbial contaminants. All finished product is held until microbiological test results are completed and negative results for Salmonella are obtained.

Redbarn has not been contacted by either the FDA, CDC or any other governmental agency regarding our Pig Ears. We are not recalling Pig Ear products at this time and have no reason to believe there are any concerns in feeding Redbarn Pig Ears to our pets. As with all pet treats, hand-washing and hygienic handling of the product is recommended.

We will be updating our sales team and customers as any further information is available to us.

If you have further questions, please contact us by email or phone.
